• Good professor with obvious enthusiasm for the subject. I felt bad that the class didn't want to participate as it was clear he was trying to create an open environment. • The instructor was passionate about the course material, and they encouraged us to do our best. The brainstorming sessions were creative and fun. • A very accomodating and clear learning environment. • Prof. Dimatteo had exceptionally well made and neat slides for every class; which he went through during each lecture and were easily available online. The readings for the course supplemented what we were learning and were pretty much focused on in his presentations for the lecture. He'd also engage me and the rest of the class with questions on the subject(s) depending on what we were learning. One of the BIGGEST values I've taken from the course however is the two classes spent on teaching us real industry practices. Ergo how to become a game designer in the industry, how to pitch a product, ect. I found that learning how the retail value of games actually pay for a lot more than just profit and how little developers actually see of the payout. It was all very enriching and valuable to me, who's very inclined to put a foot in the video game industry.

• Less long lectures might help class participation • None • N/A • I can't think of anything specifically in regards to Prof. Dimatteo himself that would need improvement. He'd keep us engaged and was really understanding. I'd say a few of my own class mates would need improvement for their attitudes before I critique teaching.

• N/A • Assignments were extremely interesting and a thrill to complete! • Overall I learned some pretty general information about an industry I want to start a career in that I didn't have prior knowledge to. I look forward to taking class with Prof. Dimatteo next semester.
